MIDSTORY RECEIVES OHIO HUMANITIES MEDIA PRODUCTION GRANT

Midstory is pleased to announce the production of a video podcast to reflect on the public health, social injustice and environmental crises of 2020 through the lens of various humanities fields and consider how these crises will change our frame of thinking moving forward.

Toledo, Ohio:

Midstory has received a grant from the Ohio Humanities to pursue a 2021 project that addresses some of the greatest challenges of 2020 from the unique lens of the humanities, including interviews from leading humanities professionals from across Ohio. The eight-episode video podcast series curates the perspective and experience of experts from literature, history, law, anthropology and more to approach the same theme: crises of identity and representation in light of recent national and global events, such as the COVID-19 public health crisis and protests against police brutality, both of which have had disproportionate repercussions for underrepresented populations. Guests include former Ohio Poet Laureate Dave Lucas, Dr. Anne Sokolsky of Ohio Wesleyan University (Comparative Literature), Dr. Akil Houston of Ohio University (Cultural and Media Studies), Dr. Amílcar E. Challú of Bowling Green State University (History) and other distinguished humanities professionals.

The video podcast series is currently in production and will be released in late spring of 2021.

This program is made possible, in part, by Ohio Humanities, a state affiliate of the National Endowment for the Humanities. Any views, findings, conclusions or recommendations expressed in this project do not necessarily represent those of the National Endowment for the Humanities.
